The Process:

The right interiors turn a property into a story. At Studio Zada, we create interiors that reflect the energy and the imagination of each client.

Textures at play:

When we design a space, I begin with my client's personal story, from there we define the textures, materials, and artworks that speak to their lives. That understanding shapes interiors that feel both personal and refined. Each project builds in layers: natural light, crafted surfaces, and the details of daily life.

Living space:

For the living areas of Casa Malay, restraint was key. Neutral backdrops let art, greenery, and light carry the mood. The client wanted calm, a retreat from city life, but also a living space that would host, entertain, and work.

Kitchen:

The kitchen was designed as both anchor and heart of the home. Built around custom carpentry and tilework, it reflects the client's desire for a warm, practical place to cook and share meals. Working within a compact footprint, we maximized storage and light while keeping the space open and inviting. With no room for a dining table, the island became both a gathering spot and centerpiece, blending utility with ease, and making the kitchen feel larger than it is.

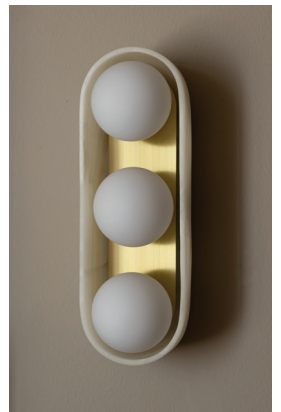

Outdoor living:

Outdoors, the home shifts into retreat mode. What was once an underused corner became the heart of the pool-court with the addition of a custom built-in bench. Designed with integrated lighting and concealed storage beneath the seats, the piece solved for comfort, function, and atmosphere all at once. The result is a space that blurs indoors and out, equally suited for gathering with family and friends, or as a serene spot for pause and reflection.

Entry and Living Space

The entry space sets the tone, drawing visitors through blue painted doors into a light filled corridor that dissolves the boundary between structure and garden.

Living and Dining

Pool, Stairway, Patio

The stairway installation has a cascading, handwoven pendant that was commissioned specifically for this double height space, bringing craft and texture to an often overlooked transitional zone. On the upper patio, we designed for flexibility using traditional acapulco chairs, potted cacti and succulents that thrive with minimal intervention.

STUDIO ZADA

Studio Zada was founded by Nola Chesler, who spent years designing sets for television and film. Her work includes Amazon's revival of Mr. & Mrs. Smith, John Wick: Chapter 2, Saturday Night Live, and campaigns for clients such as Google and Apple. This background shaped her perspective: interiors conceived with cinematic sensitivity, attuned to atmosphere, storytelling, and detail.

Today, Studio Zada brings that same rigor and creativity to interiors worldwide. From concept through installation, our services span architectural finishes, custom furniture, lighting design, and art curation. Some clients engage us for full-service design; others invite us in to style and furnish a project already underway. In every case, we manage the process seamlessly, working closely with local artisans and international partners to deliver environments of quiet luxury and lasting resonance.

Our main approach is always rooted in dialogue with clients, architects, and craftsmen. We strive to listen, distill, and execute a shared vision between us and our clients creating spaces that are uniquely personal, functional, and timeless. Let us share our passion of design, art, and craftsmanship, we'd love to begin a conversation.
